RANFURLY SHIELD RUGBY!

An each-way favourite but is there an outsider?

Marist goes into this afternoon's Trusteebank Canterbury Trophy as the each-way favourite—sentimental and logical.

Sentimental favouritism comes from the fact Marist has been a losing finalist twice in the past three years. In 1981, it lost 0-15 to Lincoln College—a team it is now trying to emulate by winning the cup-trophy double. A year later, Marist again had to settle for runner-up when overcome 15-3 by University.

Last year, the Des Hansen-Vance Stewart coached side won the Trusteebank Canterbury Cup for the first round but a shock loss to the eventual finalist, Albion, in the first round of trophy section play virtually ended its hopes of the double.

This season, Marist again won the first round but has overcome a reputation for tying up at the sharp end by reaching the final.

Its form this season also makes it the logical favourite. A draw with Sydenham is the only blemish on a perfect record.

Early on, it had to battle for narrow wins over Albion (six points), High School Old Boys (two points) and Belfast (three points) and drew with Sydenham.

But the green and whites got their show back on the road, eventually outgunning University 25-21 in the thriller which decided the first round.

Into section play and a rugged encounter with Belfast. Reduced to 14 men after a first-half brawl, Marist stuck it out and half-back Steve Baker finally got the winning try only seven minutes from time. Another stern challenge had to be resisted from Christchurch befor a place in the final was safe.

Meanwhile, New Brighton had come back from the dead . . . four losses in its first five games.

After a 17-9 "starter" over Linwood, New Brighton ran into rough waters losing to University (13-19), Christchurch (10-19), High School Old Boys (6-28) and Burnside (6-13).

TASTES GOOD LIKE REAL COFFEE SHOULD

But Terry Mitchell's side came back so well it lost only one further game (to Marist), although it did drop an uunexpected point in drawing with Lyttelton.

However, the New Brighton recovery was so successful it completed the first round in a highly satisfactory fourth place behind Marist, University and Burnside.

A comfortable win over Albion in the first round of section play was followed by the reversal of two first round defeats. New Brighton overcame High School Old Boys 12-8 after trailing early on and then clinched its final spot by edging past University 16-14.

New Brighton, of course, is no stranger to grand finals. It was the 1978 champion over Linwood, then lost 10-11 to University in 1980.

Marist-New Brighton games are traditionally close-run affairs and with both teams backed by vociferous groups of camp followers, their clashes generally have plenty of atmosphere.

Both have ample power in the forward engine room. Marist looks to its Canterbury lock, Pat O'Gorman, and former rep. prop, Pat O'Byrne, as the cornerstones of its pack, while New Brighton's strength is built around former Canterbury No. 8, Peter McLaren, experienced hooker and captain, Bob Davison, and Na Katae on the flank.

Behind the scrum, Marist has a back line keen to run the ball to its former Canterbury reps, Steve Hansen at centre and Bill Anderson on the wing. Anderson, Dean Kilworth and Craig Stewart are among the leading try scorers for the season.

New Brighton may not have quite the same scoring power but with Canterbury five-eighths Wayne Burleigh directing operations, and Trevor Keats and former Canterbury winger Ross Gibson in the line, they cannot be ignored.

Both are well served with goal kickers. Marist's Greg Coffey has accumulated 175 so far this season and is threatening the club record, while Grant McWhirter is an extremely able back-up.

Half-back Ross Adler did not take over the New Brighton goal kicking until well into the season but his accuracy has brought him 141 points at a healthy 10 per game.

Coffey has also made a specialty of dropped goals—his 15 is a record for Christchurch club rugby. But his opposite, Burleigh, is no mug when it comes to potting either.

A COUPLE ON THE UP

A season which began with all the portents of disaster has turned into Sydenham's best for years.

After the brouhaha over the colour of the team's shorts and the resignation of its senior coach, Sydenham ran into three demanding opponents in High School Old Boys, Burnside and Shirley. Another tough patch mid-season brought losses to University, New Brighton and Suburbs.

Between times, Sydenham became the only team to take a point from Marist, and upset Belfast and Christchurch to finish only two points adrift of the top eight in ninth place.

It has taken that form into section play with sound wins over Linwood, Merivale-Papanui and Suburbs.

Meanwhile, Lincoln College put together a patchy record. A draw with Albion was its only success against the top echelon but this was offset by the loss to Merivale-Papanui.

Once into section play, Lincoln College has scored big wins over Hornby, Shirley and Lyttelton. It could be coming solid at just the right time.

Sydenham's strength is in its team spirit which has inspired non-stop, bustling, offensive play and dedicated defence. It can still score tries though, some of them quite spectacular efforts, and Stewart Gourdie is among the leading try scorers in the competition.

Brent Nicol's steady goal kicking has brought in 99 points while former Mid-Canterbury rep., Alan Edge has provided some useful supplementary points with his sharp shooting dropped goals.

Despite its spotty results, Lincoln College has produced a nice flow of tries, with Brent Pope, John Earl and Simon Anderson all featuring among the top try scorers.

Well endowed with enterprise, Lincoln College is capable of attractive rugby. Hamish McGregor has provided accurate goal kicking at nearly nine points a game since he came into the team.

Lessons of history

If past performance is any guide, Marist and Sydenham should take out the trophies this afternoon.

They were the victors when today's finalists met in the Trusteebank Canterbury Cup round. Marist beat New Brighton 18-12 and Sydenham overcame Lincoln College 12-6.

But neither side has any reason for over-confidence.

Marist was unable to breach the New Brighton defence and had to rely on Greg Coffey's boot for all of its 18 points. The Marist first-five slotted four penalty goals and added a couple of pots, while half-back Ross Adler kicked three penalties and first-five Wayne Burleigh potted a goal for the seasiders.

That pretty well summed up the game . . . a very even battle with neither side able to establish any sort of forward mastery and neither back line able to pierce a well organised defence.

Sydenham did manage a try against Lincoln College. But even then, it was only one.

Bernie Ryan got the try while Brent Nicol built on the four-pointer with a conversion and a couple of penalty goals. Mike McLean landed two penalty goals for Lincoln College.

Worms behind the win

A test win is a test win but it should not be allowed to hide problems the All Blacks need to solve before taking on Australia at Sydney next week.

The infusion of Robbie Deans, Craig Green (on the wing), Steve Pokere and Frank Shelford certainly enlivened the All Blacks. Yet the back line is still not functioning as well as it should.

Much of the problem lies at half-back where Andrew Donald is too slow on the pass and often takes a few paces before deciding what to do.

It's a habit which Sid Going caught at one stage of his career (he managed to overcome it) and it makes life extremely difficult for the outside backs who have so much less time and room in which to operate.

While David Kirk is as yet no Dave Loveridge, he is certainly sharper—both on the pass and on the break—than Donald. His presence could be the catalyst needed to unleash the latent spark of the All Black back line.

Had Murray Pierce been fit enough a week earlier, he could well have been a second test lock. But with Albert Anderson having grown into his All Black jersey on this tour and his game becoming more authoritative with every outing, and Gary Whetton coming back so well the status quo will almost certainly prevail.

The change of referee will probably suit both teams. Ireland's David Burnett has reportedly impressed recent All Black teams when he has handled their matches in Britain.

Certainly, both teams will be keen to achieve something more fluid after the stop-start tempo of Roger Quittenton. It's strange because the same Mr Quittenton has not come across as such a nitpicker in previous seasons. Indeed, he has been one of the best British referees on show. Perhaps he's now out to impress the high powers to ensure selection for future tests.

Whatever the reason, the standard of rugby in the two tests has been shocking.

Neither the All Blacks nor the Wallabies have been able to turn on anything particularly constructive in either test.

While the forward battle has been tough and unyielding, neither side has really put together a period of constructive, driving play.

The All Black backs have copped plenty of flak for their disjointed performance. But the vaunted Australian back line has been no better.

Indeed, for most of the first two tests, the All Blacks have been at their most dangerous when the Aussies have tried to spin the ball. That might sound a bit cynical, but think about it and you have to agree these occasions usually ended up with massive ground gains to the All Blacks.

HIGH FLIERS OF '84

There has been a feast of tall scoring during this season's senior rugby competition.

Eight players have already passed the century mark, and Sydenham's Brent Nicol is poised on 99 with the D.C.L. Shield final still to come this afternoon.

Marist's Greg Coffey is certain to head the individual table. He has six points over Rod Latham (Christchurch), with the Trusteebank Canterbury Trophy final in hand.

Coffey needs 13 today to equal Andrew McMaster's record of last season. The Marist first-five already has one record—his 15 dropped goals this season is two ahead of the 13 of Kieran Keane (Belfast) and Deane McKinnel (then with Merivale-Papanui) last season.

Three players head the try scoring with nine apiece. They are the University No. 8, Dale Atkins, the Lincoln College loose forward, Brent Pope, and Shirley winger Brad Stringer.

Details of players who have topped 50 points this season are:
